1. Upon entering the harbor of Stettin, many freighters were observed to starboard, all docked bow to stern. At night, no lights were seen in Stettin. As soon as the ship had made fast, a military police guard was posted at the ship. The crew had to line up on the bow where the roll was checked. The ship was then examined by a patrol of about ten soldiers. No one was permitted to go ashore. Most of the harbor workers, among whom were many women, spoke good German.
2. Source's ship took one and a half days to load 2,200 tons of coal in the Reihor Werdor harbor in Stettin. It is possible for six medium sized freighters to load simultaneously in the inner harbor basin.
